John Drinkwater's Poetry-The World's Work.

Instead of next Saturday, as previously announced, the group will not leave port till June 26, on board the Themistocles, also of the Greek Line. The trip from Salonika will be by rail to Nish, where the Columbia Camp will be practically incorporated into the Red Cross work of the country while maintaining its identity as a group. Its address will be indicated by the word Columbia at Nish, in care of the Red Cross of Serbia.

Bishop Greer of New York and Bishop Whitehead of Pittsburgh have issued letters to the members of their dioceses urging additional support rom which the folnarried him on Christmas morn, th, wee betide; ah, wee betide, felt said I was a comely bride,— it me forlorn.

All brided was my golden hair, And heavy then, and shining then. My limbs were sweet to madden men, 0 caming snare.

If hanty was a thing, they say, of large renown, - O dread renown, as the day!

Eskisses burn my mouth and brows,— 0 burning kiss. O barren kiss,— My body for his worship is, and so he vows.

It daily many men draw near, With courtly speech and subtle speech; I gather from the lips of each A deadly fear.

As he grows sullen I grow cold, And whose the blame? Not mine the blame; Their passions round me as a flame all fercely fold. and, oh, to think that he might be

Se proudly set, above them self he might but awaken yet the soul of me. Will no man seek, and seeking find, The soul of me, the soul of me? Nay, even as they are, so is he, tot all are blind.

At me, the morn, the luckless morn; rold I were dead.

He at times seeks to be hid that He may save and help. He did thus to His disciples when He was here. So He did on the lake. So He did to the Emmaus travellers. Often He hides Himself in events. Every great and significant event, joyous or sorrowful, is a coming of Christ. But alas! many allow the event to pass without recognizing Him. He hides Himself in persons. The beggar at your gate may bring the appealing Christ to you. Oh, see that you fail not to perceive Him. Christ hides Himself in influences. Many of the influences that come upon us are visitations of the Lord. He hides in these, that He may educate us into a greater ability to recognize Him.—Rev. Dinsdale T. Young.

Jesus Christ our Lord. Romans vii, 24, 25. We do not get that heart-rest for fication, because it is sin that so disturbs and troubles our rest and drags us down into the dust. Have you not again and again felt the terrible conflict within-that internecine war which seemed so hopeless? Oh, believe that Christ who has given you the peace of pardon can give you the peace of purity, too. He can cleanse you from those terrible inward foes to peace. Let Him do it. Whatever there is in us that hinders peace-pride, selfishness, covetousness-all these are se cret ills that lurk within the soul: let them go down before the incoming of Him who is the Prince of
